County Landowners Again Offered Free Seedlings

Free pine seedlings will be available to Appomattox County landowners for spring planting through the matching seedling program of Westvaco Corporation in cooperation with the Virginia Division of Forestry, according to Bruce Stevens, Westvaco Forester. Any county landowner who buys seedlings from the Division of Forestry can get free pine seedlings on a one-for-one basis, at the time of ordering their seedlings.

Westvaco also will give up to 500 free pine seedlings to any member of an organized youth group, and up to 5,000 free seedlings to any school wishing to start or expand a school forest. Neither the youth or schools are required to buy seedlings to be eligible for this offer.

Westvaco has given nearly 20,000 pine seedlings to Virginia landowners and youth groups since the program started in 1954.

In addition to planting trees for timber production, foresters recommend tree planting for soil erosion control, as shelter for game, and for stabilization of hillsides and stream banks. The shade of trees also will help keep the stream cool enough for trout and other game fish.

The U. S. Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service will share the cost of the seedlings, tree planting cost, with the landowners through the Rural Environmental Assistance Program (REAP), details of which can be obtained from the county ASCS office.

Landowners seeding further information on placing seedling orders, or planting, may contact local offices of the Division of Forestry, VPI Extension Service, U. S. Soil Conservation Service, or Westvaco Corporation, Box 4025, Lynchburg, Va. 24502.
